The Bluest Hands Economic 1890 1940 Book Preview

Women played a vital role in the Abeokuta indigo dyeing industry during the period 1850 to 1939. This period was particularly critical for the dyeing industry as legitimate trade and colonialism transformed the social, political, and economic context in which female dyers plied their trade. Women dyers engaged in a dynamic and fluid relationship with the colonial political economy that enabled them to navigate the many changes that accompanied colonial rule. Yet, as Byfield shows, there was a paradoxical side to this engagement. Women indigo dyers simultaneously shaped and were shaped by the uneven processes of colonialism and capitalism, with profound consequences both for women dyers and the Abeokuta indigo industry itself.

As one of the few historical treatments of African craft producers, The Bluest Hands illuminates changes in the political consciousness and political activism of women dyers as they mobilized to protect their industry. Scholars interested in African history, art history, African politics, economic history, and women's studies will find much of value in this intriguing study.
